Présentation de l'éditeur

Vendredi 4 décembre au matin. Le FBI est déjà sur les dents. Ils sont à peine une poignée, vétérans de la guerre du Vietnam rassemblés en un groupe nommé Green Band, et pourtant ils font trembler les États-Unis. Leur leader, le colonel David Hudson, réclame pour ses pairs un traitement compensatoire et, surtout, la reconnaissance de leurs sacrifices consentis durant le conflit par le gouvernement. Si ces revendications ne sont pas entendues, Wall Street, symbole de la toute-puissance financière américaine, sera rayé de la carte. Walter Trentkamp, le chef du FBI, ne peut seul faire face à l'imminence de la menace. Il contacte Arch Carroll, spécialiste mondial en la matière. Épaulé par Caitlin Dillon, une avocate pleine de ressources, il entame une course contre la montre : les bombes doivent exploser l'après-midi même, à 17 h 05. Première édition : Fleuve noir, 2003. From Publishers Weekly

While Patterson's thriller is slightly out-of-date with its Cold War setting, it remains dramatically contemporary in its vision of a stock market thrown into chaos when a group of saboteurs blows up several Wall Street institutions. Actor Fernandez's mellow reading allows the story to unfold unhurriedly, though too slowly for the first half. Arch Carroll, head of the CIA's antiterrorist division, and Caitlin Dylan, director of enforcement for the SEC, team up professionally, and later romantically, to locate the Wall Street terrorists before they strike again. Arch travels to Paris and back (unfortunately, Fernandez, who capably reproduces other accents, has a poor grasp of French pronunciation), as he finds himself on the trail of former colonel David Hudson and his ragtag band of vengeance-seeking Vietnam veterans. Based on the Warner mass market paperback (originally published as Black Market in 1987).

Rare is the performer who can juggle multiple foreign accents fluidly. Stephen Lang somehow manages to keep well over a dozen ethnically diverse characters in the air as he narrates James Patterson's fast-paced international thriller about a conspiracy to disrupt the world's financial markets. As the story opens, a militia group known as "Green Band" detonates explosives in several key buildings in New York's financial district. They have no apparent motive or demand, and their link to an unseen international terrorist is ambiguous. It is up to Federal Agent Archer Carroll to unravel the plot before it unravels the Western world. The novel--an adaptation of an earlier Patterson book--bears minor anachronisms, but listeners won't mind as Lang's relentless pace and Patterson's storytelling guide them on this terrifying ride.
